Essay = My high-school GPA. does not represent the student I am today, nor does it reflect my ability. As a child, I struggled in school. I am from a blended family that faced one tragedy after the next. At age five, my mother died in a terrible car accident, leaving my father to raise my two brothers and me. A few years later, my father remarried, blessing us with two new sisters and a stepmother. Our new family members had challenges of their own, including histories of sexual abuse and drug abuse. Although we were loved, my stepmother was an alcoholic with a Bi-polar diagnosis. Our home life was extremely stressful and chaotic. While my peers were preparing for and taking the SAT / ACT, I was visiting my stepmother in the psychiatric hospital. In 1996 I graduated from high school in addition to earning my Cosmetology degree. My high school GPA accurately represents the student that I was in 1996. More than twenty years later, I have a transfer GPA of 4.0. I am driven, well organized, diligent, and intelligent. Last spring, I earned my Associate in Business, with Special Requirements while working full time in a law firm and raising a family. I have always excelled professionally. I have managed restaurants, owned and operated two small businesses, served as Director of Finance for a social services agency, as well as managed and developed business processes for a law firm. In my current position as Project Manager of Process Improvements, I have the vital task of improving our database and our business processes. I work across all departments to identify problems, then I recommend and implement solutions. I provide innovative, efficient solutions that require both technical expertise and a clear understanding of our firm's objective. I take great pride in knowing that my work plays an integral role in our ability to grow. Throughout my private life and professional career, I have encountered challenges that required perseverance. I've learned that with dedication, follow thru and resourcefulness, most problems can be resolved. These lessons have ingrained in me a love for fixing problems. In business, process solutions and computer information systems go hand in hand. Whether I am writing code, managing a development project, or running an entire organization, I must know how a system works if I am to identify the best solutions. My second-choice major is another way of solving a problem, the problem of supply. Although my professional experience is not in this field, I believe it lends its-self to a similar style of thinking. Because of this, I know that I would be successful in the area. I thank you for time consideration.
